FROM CAUSES UNKNOWN

Jury Could Not Find Out What Killed Morris.

"MORMON KID" IS ABSENT

Doctors Who Performed the Autopsy Say the Death Was Not Due to the Stabbing—The Knife Was Never Found.

The inquest to inquire into the facts and circumstances surrounding the death of Eugene Morris was continued yesterday morning before Coroner Hardenbrook and a jury composed of H. Redmond, foreman; T. Ehret, W. C. Haynes, R. D. Crosswhite, Edward Christian and Richard Moran.

The medical men who had performed an autopsy on the body the day before were prepared with their report, and all was in readiness to proceed with the testimony except for the absence of the "Mormon Kid," who is said to be in Butte. Constable Walsh was in Butte two days looking for him, but could not find him. All the testimony was heard in the forenoon and a continuance was taken until 2:30 o'clock to see if by that time the "Mormon Kid" could be found, but the case had to go to the jury without his evidence.

Attorney Duffy appeared as counsel for Noonan, but took no part in the examination of the witnesses. It is understood that the line of defense to be adopted by Noonan's counsel is that death was not caused by the wound inflicted, and that the injury, if any, which the deceased received from the prisoner was inflicted in self-defense and in protection of "Leadville Mary," who declared that Morris had designs upon her life.

The first witness called was Dr. N. S. Snyder. His evidence was as follows: "I am a physician and surgeon. I saw Eugene Morris last Sunday, a week ago at the Leadville house about a quarter to five in the morning. He was lying on the bed and had some pain, not much. I examined his chest and found a mark through his clothes and entering the skin. The wound was a little to the left of the navel and a little above. It was about half an inch in length, perhaps three-fourths. The wound penetrated the abdominal cavity. All such wounds are dangerous. I opened the wound in the forenoon and it proved to enter the cavity. He died about 10 o'clock the morning. I was present just before he died; he was having convulsions."

Dr. J. M. Sligh was sworn and testified as follows: "I am a physician and surgeon in Anaconda. I made an autopsy yesterday in connection with Dr. Stephens upon the body of the man they call Eugene Morris. I do not know what was the cause of death."

By Attorney Goodman—it has been testified, doctor, that this man received a wound, slight wound, about three-eighths of an inch long and deep enough to strike the cavity. From your examination of this body would that wound be sufficient to cause death?

"No, sir."

"Do you think from your examination of the deceased that he died from the effect of the wound or from causes independent of the wound?"

"I think he died from causes entirely independent of the stabbed wound."

At the request of the coroner the witness then read full particulars of the autopsy made by Dr. Stephens and himself.

Dr. H. W. Stephens was sworn and his testimony was entirely corroborative of Dr. Sligh's evidence.

"Leadville Mary" was the next witness. She gave her name as Mary Kerr and testified as follows: "I live on East Front street, No. 119, called the 'Leadville house.' I knew Eugene Morris and Joe Noonan. A whole lot of trouble through the week, which everybody knows, and I was played out for want of sleep and tired to death, and I asked this gentleman, (indicating Noonan), I said, 'Joe, I have got to have him arrested and I am dead for the want of sleep.' He said, 'No, don't do that, that is not necessary to have him arrested. You go to sleep and I will see that he does not bother you.' Once or twice, I could not tell how many times, I think he crawled over the top of the partition into my room. This gentleman said to me: 'Go to sleep and I will sit down on this stool and I will see that he don't go in and bother you any more.' I said, 'Very well,' and I went to sleep. The first thing I heard the window break and I said, 'There goes another window,' and I don't know anything about the stabbing. On Wednesday night, before this he drew a knife on me. Here the witness was interrupted and confined to the facts of the case. The witness maintained throughout that she was asleep and did not know what took place. She said that her room and that of Morris were some distance apart."

Bert Ackerman swore: "I live in Anaconda. I knew Morris and Noonan. I was present at the time of the difficulty between Noonan and Morris. The first thing that took place there was 'Shorty' Morris came out of room 22 and went and climbed over the partition into Mary's room. Noonan put him out of the room. I came and put Morris back to bed. I said 'You are too drunk to be around here.' Noonan was in the room with Mary. Morris came back and started to break the door in. Noonan opened the door and told him to get away. He refused to get away and they had a little fight. I got Morris and carried him back into room 22 and put him on a cot. I took his shoes off and told him to stay there. About half an hour afterwards he came back and ran through the office with a knife in his hand, and said: 'I will fix Cream Puff.' I should judge it was a pocket knife about three inches long. This was between 3 and 4 o'clock on Sunday morning. I got up as soon as I could. At the time I got there he was lying on the floor. He jumped up and ran down the right hand hall and fell down by the stove. He said, 'I am stabbed.' I pulled his clothes off; when I came back to the office the 'Mormon Kid' was there and I said, 'Take care of Shorty till I get a doctor.' I saw the wound. I did not see the difficulty when he was stabbed."

This concluded the testimony and the inquest was continued until 2:30, when the jury retired to consider their verdict.

The fact that the knife which caused the injury was never found and the absence of the "Mormon Kid," who could probably give very important evidence, are considered very suspicious circumstances.

The jury brought in a verdict that Eugene Morris came to his death from causes unknown to the jurors.

THE PLAY TO-NIGHT.
Plan Opens This Morning for Hermann To-Morrow Night.

An event that Anaconda play-goers are sure to regard as of more than ordinary importance in local amusement annals will be the coming to the Margaret this evening of Frank Lane, and an excellent company of fun makers in Charles Hoyt's most famous farce-comedy, "A Trip to Chinatown."

The play has a history that makes its coming of more than usual interest. For 45 consecutive performances it held the boards at Hoyt's theater, New York, playing to the capacity of the house. This has never been approached before, the longest run previous to that time being "Adonis" for 93 times, ending April 17, 1888. When the play was removed from Hoyt's theater it was still crowding the house, and had it not been for its road engagements previously made, would probably be running there now.

When the curtain ascends this evening on "A Trip to Chinatown" the admirers of the play will see a production a counterpart in every way to the farce comedy as given in New York. Many new features have been added, and a number of musical numbers that are sure to set everybody singing and whistling them have been introduced.

The seats are going fast at Smith's drug store and there will be a crowded house.

The plan opens this morning at 9 o'clock for the Hermann performance to-morrow night. This will undoubtedly prove as great a drawing card as the performance deserves. Many citizens expected that their intention not to miss this opportunity of seeing the wonderful works of magic that will be represented.

J. Stanley Sanford, manager for Frank Lane and company, visited the Margaret and was asked what he thought of the theater. He said: "I have seen theaters all over the world, Paris and London included, and your theater is superior to any I have seen. The theater here is a monument to the enterprise of this part of the country. It is a better theater than any they have in San Francisco; it is better than any they have in Buffalo."

I want to rent a six-room house, furnished. Must be centrally located. Address, "H. B. T.," care of Standard.

HE WAS INSURED.
Glad Tidings Received by a Widow From a Friend of Her Late Husband.

The family of John Tronczynski, who was killed by a derrick on Monday night at one of the bridges of the R. & P. railway, near Butte, moved to this city from Glendive, in the eastern part of the state, a year and a half ago. Their home is at No. 717 Ash street.

Mrs. Tronczynski is left with four small children to care for, ranging in age from 5 months to 7 years, but the case was not unfortunate at all. The breadwinner for this family was a member of the A. O. U. W. at Glendive, but Mrs. Tronczynski thought he was not in good standing, as she knew he had been unable to keep the dues paid up for about a year past. A telegram to Glendive yesterday, however, brought back the cheerful intelligence that he was still in good standing, and that she was entitled to the insurance money of $2,000. This condition of affairs was due to the kindness of a friend and brother Workman of the deceased named Gene Crouxoux. A pathetic scene followed when the telegram containing this news was read to Mrs. Tronczynski by Theodore Ehret, who had telegraphed to Glendive for her. It was glad tidings indeed to Mrs. Tronczynski, who now has a heavy responsibility to bear.

Mrs. Tronczynski will go to Butte and take the remains to Glendive for burial.

When in Butte lunch at Sherman's.

John Kimmorle has moved his shoe shop from No. 3 Main street to 112 West Commercial. Will be pleased to see all old customers at the new shop.

PRINCE OF IRELAND.
Duke of York May Have That Title Conferred Upon Him.

Irishmen everywhere are interested in the news that the ruling powers in Great Britain are seriously thinking of creating the Duke of York Prince of Ireland, and of making the title a permanent one for the eldest son of the Prince of Wales, says the New York Herald. That the idea will be favorably regarded by many of them, and especially by those of Tory tendencies, is as certain as that it will be unfavorably regarded by others, who are loath to think that a Saxon and an alien shall be honored with a title which once had a real and far-reaching significance. We hear little about Irish kings until after the Millennium landed in Ireland, an event that took place more than 1,000 years before the Christian era.

They came to Ireland by way of Sicily, being led by 10, the son of King Milesius, ruler of the Gaelic colony in Galicia, Spain. Landing at Innis Owen, Irish was hospitably received by the sons of the lately deceased king, but on his way to his ship he was slain by the Tuatha de Danaans, who naturally objected to his intrusion. Lugalibh, his son, succeeded him, and soon a new expedition started for Ireland, and among the leaders were the eight sons of Milesius, who were accompanied by their mother, Scotia. These bold adventurers had 20 ships, and after some hot fights, in one of which Scotia was slain, they succeeded in landing. Of the leaders the most notable were Heber and Hereon. Homeric figures, indeed, they are, and a fine epic might be written about their many doings and deeds. They divided Ireland between them, but a civil war soon broke out, in which Heber was killed, so that Hereon was really the first absolute monarch of all Ireland. All subsequent Irish kings traced their descent from him, or rather from Milesius and Ith.

The Duke of York may be created Prince of Ireland, and even his most fervent admirer will hardly admit of any Milesian blood flows through his veins. In the eyes of thoroughbred Irishmen this is a serious blemish, for, except in very rare instances, the rule that the Irish monarch must be of Milesian origin has been strictly observed. One hundred and eighteen monarchs ruled in Ireland from the landing of the Milesians to the coming of St. Patrick, and of these 29 were descended from Heber, 69 from Hereon, 24 from Ith, and three from Ith through his son Lugalibh. Of the two remaining ones was his own origin, and the other was a woman, by name Macha, from whom Armagh derives its name. Scores of monarchs ruled after these; but, though their descendants are still vigorous and proud potent factors, not only in Ireland, but also in most American cities, they and their deeds are well-nigh forgotten. The present monarch is Victoria, who is queen of Ireland as well as of Great Britain. True Celts, however, consider that the descendants of Milesius alone have any right to sovereignty over Erin, and that the pretensions of Saxon monarchs in this direction are baseless and absurd.

Irishmen know very little about Queen Victoria and her family. Her majesty has visited the island, but she has no royal residence there, and she has never stayed there more than a few days. The Prince of Wales has also made a trip to the Lakes of Killarney, but he, too, was evidently glad enough to get back to England. The lord lieutenant is the queen's representative in Ireland, and his residence, Dublin castle, is to all patriotic Irishmen the visible token of British supremacy.

The question now is, if the Duke of York is created Prince of Ireland, will he reside there a few months each year, and, if so, where will he reside? If he purchases an estate and lives among the people, he may become popular to some degree—at any rate, his presence in Ireland will tend to remove some erroneous impressions in regard to the royal family. The Muckross estate has been suggested as a royal residence, and in many respects it would be admirable. True, it is in the heart of a disaffected district, but then, if the duke wants to win the hearts of the Irish people he must go among those who are not naturally lovers of the English, and show them that a royal Englishman may in time become a royal Irishman. He may work wonders if he can once satisfy the people that he has their interests at heart.

That some of the duke's friends in England will shudder at the idea of his living in Ireland is certain, and if he pays any heed to them he may make a fatal mistake at the start. There is a popular notion in England that no member of the royal family should attempt to live in Ireland without a strong bodyguard ever round him and a regiment of soldiers ever within call. Now, if the Duke of York turns the Muckross estate into a Southern Dublin castle, he will not become a favorite with the Irish people. He will win unequalled homage and admiration from the Earl of Kenmare, Lord Bently, Lord Fermoy and the other Southern potentates; but if he is constantly hedged round with soldiers, he will fail to convince the radical Irish that his intentions are really friendly. It has been claimed that Ireland is an unsafe place for any member of Queen Victoria's family to live in, but such a claim has little weight. One thing is certain, Irishmen have no personal animosity toward Victoria or her children. It is the system against which they revolt and not against its representatives.

Jeon Ingelow's personal estate amounted to only $30,000 at her death.
